The culture technique will be used to study the modulation of airway secretory cell function by a variety of factors that are known to be present in lungs in vivo and that may also be present in airway fluids in vivo. Epithelial secretory cells produce mediators that exert direct and indirect effects on non-secretory cells in the airway. It is not known whether the differentiation of such cells is similar in vivo or in vitro. The culture system is a model system for studying the development of airway epithelium and for examining the effects of peptides and small molecules on such differentiation. Purified preparations of tumor necrosis factor (TNF) will be used to examine the effect of the proinflammatory cytokine on airway epithelial cell differentiation. The culture system will be used to characterize, measure and compare airway cell types which are known to be important in asthma and which are produced in significant quantities in vivo, viz., T-lymphocytes and mast cells. Possible interactions between these cells and airway epithelial cells will be examined in vitro to determine which cell type is more important in initiating or modulating airway inflammation.Lifetime exposure to electromagnetic fields from mobile phones may enhance human insulin release in diabetics: a population-based observational study. The aim of this study was to examine the association between daily lifetime exposure to electromagnetic fields (EMFs) from mobile phones and fasting serum insulin ( 50b96ab0b6
