The screenwriters adapted the source novels directly, but, according to film critic Michael Coate, the novels' story arcs were softened, "minimized, and in some cases made to ring false," with a few exceptions. Jack Aubrey is portrayed by DiCaprio, who had auditioned for the role of Hugh Fanshawe, a.k.a. "Billy Bones" in the television series Jekyll & Hyde, which was intended to have a larger ensemble cast, including Dustin Hoffman as Jack's captain, Stephen Graham as his uncle, Francis O'Brien as Aubrey's half-brother, and Toni Collette as Aubrey's lover. According to DiCaprio, he and the producers ultimately decided to develop a film that was more of a biographical account of Jack Aubrey's life. Filming began in September 2007. On April 26, 2008, Warner Bros. released a DVD of the film, which features audio commentaries by the director and cast, deleted scenes, a behind-the-scenes look, and outtakes. The film grossed $87.4 million worldwide against its $30 million budget, and was highly acclaimed by critics. It was nominated for four Golden Globe Awards, and won one: Best Actor – Drama. DiCaprio was also nominated for the Academy Award for Best Actor, but lost to Tom Hanks for Philadelphia. Plot In the summer of 1796, Lieutenant Jack Aubrey and the HMS Seahorse, the Royal Navy's most successful ship under the command of Captain Hugh Palliser, set sail from the Caribbean on a mission to assist the French in the Siege of Toulon, France. On board are Aubrey's longtime shipmate Stephen Maturin, a naturalist physician, and the ship's surgeon, William Simpson. Soon after leaving port, the ship is attacked by two French frigates and taken under the command of the notorious privateer Jack Trelawney. Trelawney, seeking to lure ships into his small but well-equipped squadron, does not realize Aubrey has signed on to the mission with Trelawney's rival, the privateer captain/sailor Stephen Hawkins. On one night out of port, the Seahorse captures a Spanish corvette that is carrying arms for the French. At the start of the voyage, the crew are told that Aubrey has been given command of the first ship in 82157476af
