Tuesday, February 22, 2007 Lincoln's Inn The annual Lincoln's Inn evening can be seen as one of the highlights of the legal year. It's clear why this event is of such great significance to the legal profession. It raises funds for the charitable work of the Inn - the Inn has been providing innovative legal services to low income people for almost 200 years and there are many worthy causes from which to choose. Amongst these are: the Law Society's Legal Information Service which provides free information to solicitors to help them to develop the range of legal skills to suit their clients, the services of the Family Law Advice Service and the Specialist Legal Aid Unit, as well as the full range of the Inn's other services. The dinners are always good value and this year the menu is particularly attractive. There are eleven different main courses, with three a la carte options, plus extras - soup, salad, coffee and liqueurs for £35 per person. It is a great deal and a real bonus is that it's held in the spectacular dining room of the Aldwych Grand. Over 100 of us gathered on the evening of 13 February 2007 - most of us were law students from The Inn of Gresham College in London - for an outstanding supper. The chief guest was Paul Webley who founded the Inn of Gresham College and more recently The Inn at Adelphi. He spoke with great insight and vigour about the history of the Inn and the work that it does. It was announced at the evening that the Robin Clapp Memorial Fund had received the support of The Inns of Court for the production of a portrait of Robin Clapp, the first Warden of the Inn and a man who many of us still regard as one of the most influential figures in the history of The Inn. The portrait, by Dominic Murphy, was unveiled on the evening by the President of the Inn, Sir William Gore-Booth of Temple Bar and attended by family and friends of all who knew Robin. The theme of the evening was the courage of those who stand up for others. The Accountant-General for Scotland, Sir Brian Jarman, spoke about the work of the Lending Library, an organisation for which he is Patron, and the stories of the members of the Library who stand up for others. The Librarian, Mr Angus MacDonald spoke about his work with the National Heritage List and
